

Dear Team Shippit,

RE: Senior Growth Marketing Manager, Shippit

I'm applying for the Senior Growth Marketing Manager role, as a member of your team encouraged me to do so. I'd also love to work for a major SaaS player, like Australian scaleup, Shippit.

The role itself appeals to me, because I love leading a team by example. I love sharing my enthusiasm for AI and tech, and am testing new tools or ideas every day. I'd carry the momentum across a four-person team, own the budget, stay accountable to pipeline, and keep new business moving through the long-cycle enterprise SaaS motion.

I'm a digital-first marketing leader and an AI builder by practice rather than theory. In my current role as Head of Marketing for 90 Seconds, an enterprise B2B SaaS platform, I lead the global marketing function and have owned $5M in opportunities since June 2024, in exactly the long-cycle, multi-touch motion you've described. Earlier, as Digital Marketing Manager at Refuel Creative, I supported FlatRateNOW, a B2B SaaS startup, from a very early stage. That work delivered a 445% subscription increase and won a HubSpot Impact Award.

Your description asks for something rare: a people leader, a marketer who is still genuinely on the tools, and someone who drives AI adoption by example. That is exactly who I am.

A people leader. I've led a team of four at agency and managed an APAC team, including an offshore report, in my current role. I lead by setting clear priorities, keeping a calm environment and coaching people to do their best work. I've mentored marketers for years, lecturing at UniSA and TAFE SA, and I've stepped up before to oversee a seven-figure marketing budget while covering for my manager. A parental-leave cover needs exactly that: a steady hand that keeps the team moving and hands it back stronger.

A marketer on the tools. I don't brief automations and wait, I build them. I architected a 'GTM Playbook' at 90 Seconds that wires our CRM and SEO data together to automate market mapping. I'm a HubSpot operator at award depth, and on one B2B SaaS rebuild I built 307 reports across 17 dashboards to keep marketing and Sales honest on attribution, working hand in hand with Revenue Operations on pipeline contribution and conversion. On your stack, I've worked with Zapier. Webflow, Airtable and Factors.ai are new to me, but I'm a quick learner and troubleshoot myself.

An AI builder who lifts the whole team. I build with AI every day. I configured a live HubSpot Customer Agent that now handles incoming service queries, and I rebuilt our website as a fully vibe-coded build, running a 300+ page legacy migration through a fleet of Anthropic-API agents. Just as important, I coach my team to find the faster, smarter way, so AI adoption spreads by example rather than by mandate. That is the work I want more of.

I'll be straight on one thing: I haven't worked in logistics directly. I have run growth for eCommerce and retail brands, which sit right next to your customers, and I bring the enterprise B2B craft and the hands-on building on day one. I'm Adelaide-based and happy to travel to Sydney for in-person collaboration every couple of months.

I'm excited to present my skills and diversity of experience as complementary, and to carry your growth function with energy and care while your Senior Growth Marketing Manager is on leave. I look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely,

Rubina Carlson
